THE UNION VETERAN CORPS.

First Business Meeting in the New Armory-Inauguration Arrangements. The first business meeting of the Union Veteran Corps, Captain S. E. Thomason in the chair, E. J. Dowling secretary, was held in the new armory, 930 Pennsylvania avenue, last evening. Arrangements were perfected for the purchase of overcoats and dress hats of the most approved pattern and material now in use in the regular army, the same to be delivered to the commanding officer by the 15th of the month. The armory is well located, thoroughly fitted up and appointed, neatly decorated, and is a very pleasant place of assembly for the honorary members, who witness the evolutions and manual of the veterans on Monday and Thursday evenings of each week. The corps has an active membership of sixty-three, well drilled and disciplined. Additions are being continually made to its numbers, and it is believed it will not fall short of one hundred active members by the Nelson, from the committee of fifteen, reported country; and, as a consequence, its finances are in than had been originally calculated. A free and time on the Star. and discipline it is the fixed purpose of this corps The commander was authorized to appoint as many Mr. William F. Amusements To-Day.

Mary Anderson, in her Bianca last night, was the same as in every other character she has played here, with flashes of power and impassioned passages, and lack of pathos in the situations demanding tenderness and womanly feeling. She will repeat her impersonation of Parthenia, in the romantic play of "Ingomar," at the matinee this afternoon, and to-night for her farewell performance she will appear in Talford's beautiful play of "lon."

"Needles and Pins" has furnished a great amount of amusement to good audiences at Ford's Opera-House this week, and the last performances will be given this afternoon and to-night.

John Nugent's Confinement.

"Speaking of the premature publication of treaties," said Hon. W. E. Robinson (Richelieu) to a REPUBLICAN representative the other day, "I was W. C. Patterson, Philadelphia; F. R. Newbold, S.

'What were the circumstances?' asked our man. "You are too young to remember the great exboundary line between the United States and Great Britain, I suppose?"

"Yes," replied our intelligent infant, "rather young to remember it; but I have read a great deal about it. That was the time, was it not, that the Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the Woman's expression of 'fifty-four forty or fight' came into > Britain and less advantageous to the United States. "The question had become a party one, and there was intense interest manifested on all sides as to the contents of the treaties. So when they were finally sent to the Senate it became an object with all the newspaper men to get hold of a copy. As correspondent of the New York Tribune, I was, of course, on the alert like the rest, but had made no headway and was somewhat discouraged when chance threw me into the company of a Senator with whom I was on very good terms. This gen-ame time what he meant. "The Oregon boundary treaty," he replied; don't you wish you had it?"

"I replied that I would, and finally, after a great deal of bantering and good-natured chaffing, I obtained possession of the precious document, and, as you may readily guess, lost no time in copying the portion I wanted and hustling it off in the mail or New York. I remember that it was a very brief document, and the portion that I used did not make more than three or four inches of space in the Tribune's columns. The next morning the Senator, having sobered up, came to a realizing sense of the great indiscretion he had committed, came to my room in a terrible state of mind and begged the return of the treaty and a promise that I should not use any of the information that I had obtained. If published, he said it would lead to an investigation, which might ruiu him and be damaging to me. If told him that it was too late to remedy the damage I had done, for soothed him."

"And did an investigation result?" "Yes. As soon as the papers came back a talk in executive session, similar to that reported in the Senate touching the publication of the Chinese treaties, took place, and a committee of three was appointed to investigate the matter. Daniel Webster was made chairman of the committee, and the most singular feature of the case was the appointment of the very Senator from whom I had procured the treaty as one of the members of the com-

"Well, how did it come out?"

"Who was the Senator?"

"I was hauled up before the committee and signated to do the work by the sureties. asked bow I obtained possession of the treaty, and. of course, refused to tell. Mr. Webster was very friendly to me, and we were on quite familiar

"Addressing him, as chairman, I said in substance: 'You, sir, know that no one entertains a higher respect for the dignity of the Senate than I, but you must know that I, as an honorable man, cannot betray the source of my information. You can of course imprison me, but as the session is drawing to a close my punishment could last but a few days, for your power over me will cease with the end of the session.' Mr. Webster listened to my statement with gravity, but the twinkle in his eye showed me that he appreciated the powerlessness of the committee and the humor of the situation. 'I think we would better adjourn.' was all he said; and the committee, taking his advice, dispersed without taking any action on my case, and that was the end of it." "It seems to be the fate of important treaties to escape the secresy of the Senate executive session," said THE REPUBLICAN. "Yes," said Mr. Robinson; "it was nearly always the case during my time. I remember that John Nugent, of the Hereld, published the Ashburton treaty in the same way, and was placed in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and kept in quasi confinement for weeks for refusing to tell a Senate committee how he got it."

CAPTURED AT LAST.

The Hero of Hard-Fought Fields Caught in the Recent Campaign.

There is a tall, splendid-looking fellow frequently seen on the Avenue-a man of fine physique, bearded like a pard, and with a kindly he generally attracts the attention of the passer-by. regiment during the war. At Fredericksburg he exhibited great coolness under the murderous fire of the rebels, while executing a piece of engineering work requiring bravery and sagacity. When the war was over he became infatuated with the belief that his native country could be freed from the grasp of Eugland by force of arms. He organized squads of men all over Ireland, drilled them persistently, and, as commander-in-chief of the Fenian army of invasion, was making extensive preparations, with the aid of friends here, to give Great Britain some trouble. He was captured one fatal night and his forces scattered. Many of them-some of whom are now in this city-were placed in British prisons. He himself lingered seven years in an English dungeon. Friends outside blew up a portion of the jail to effect his release. It came at last through the intervention of our Government, he being an American citizen. For several years past he has been a Government official. He has lectured all over the country for Ireland and liberty, and stumped for the success of the Republican party from Maine to California in every campaign He is still young and enthusiastic, and a forcible lians he fell not "To die 'midst flame and smoke.

And shout, and groan, and sabre stroke," out a Hoosier girl's eyes at Fort Wayne pierced him to the heart, and everybody is whispering, "Have you heard the news? Colonel B. is married." Our hero was too much of a military man not to perform a coup d'état in this, his last campaign, so he ran away with his bride, like Young Lochinvar. But he is happy, and so is the bride, because the old folks have become reconciled, and his friends are congratulating him right and left.

Our 10 per cent. discount is being appreciated, as usual, by the public. They fully realize the advantages we possess over other houses in manufacturing all our goods, and that we give our customers the benefit of these advantages in always marking our prices at the very lowest figures consistent with making a living profit. We don't want to carry any goods over from one season to another, and we therefore make this reduction of 10 per cent. on all Winter Clothing.
